1. The rapidity with which General Markos Vafiades succeeded in evacuating the remains of his Greek "Democratic Army", together with 3,800 wounded and the best part of his considerable materiel, is confirmatory evidence that the road net on the Albanian-Greek frontier has been greatly expanded to meet the tactical needs of the Communist guerrillas. The following improvements in the road net are believed to have been made:
 - a. Mule paths from Bozhigrad (southeast of Biliisht) have been increased and enlarged to the south;
 - b. The Bozhigrad-Dardhe road has been extended southeastward into the Nikolice Iofka (heights) to a height of 1,870 meters;
 - c. From the Qinamit pass, a road, passable to animal-drawn carts, runs southeast to the Grammos range to the Greek frontier;
 - d. A series of mule paths complete this communications system between the Korce-Leskovic road and the Greek frontier.
